

Group: Tim, Jessica, Grace, Brenna, Amanda

Responses/Stickies:

<https://prework.connectingforchangelc.com/?view=facilitator&code=TNN2026#wall>

Prompt: Look across the stickies. note any patterns. what things lump? what things split?

Themes, patterns, or common words:

- Most common word is: Share
- People Knowing Each Other - knowing names, being known, familiarity
- Built Environment
- Shared Spaces, Spaces of gathering
- Relationship - said and unsaid
- Cultural History
- Food, Restaurants, Eating meals together
- Stories - memory, shared stories, hope, laments
- Mix of structural and relational

Lump:

See themes above ^

Splits:

1. Geographic Understanding of Neighborhood and Relational Understanding of Neighborhood

When thinking about neighborhood geographically, it excludes. Thinking about neighborhood relationally includes. But the example of needing boundary when the boundaries are in place to make it a smaller actionable scale.

Geographic bound is important: Needs to be bounded by the place, and the soil and then not taking into account the built and created environment. The bounds exists to say this is our place, and what we care about.

Relationship is important because it fosters responsibility to each other.

Churches get stuck when they are commuter churches, taking proximity out of it can free up imagination AND can be a cop out to not invest in place.

If you neighbor is "everyone" that's unclear and overwhelming, limits and boundaries bring clarity and ability to be present and responsible.

2. Tension in:

Rootedness and Proximity

Networks and Limits

Discussion:

Where are our limits? And who are we responsible to or with?

This conversation is hard because of 2 super un-fun, counter-cultural things: 1) Accepting Limits and 2) taking on responsibility
But they are both ways to be human or human scale.

Neighborhoods are not accidental, geographic boundaries are rooted in oppressive history.
Jesus - who is my neighbor? - the good samaritan is the answer, the not proximate person.

It's the both/and - that needs intentionality